A wry theme of John Payne Collier: Scholarship and Forgery in the Nineteenth Century is the cavalier treatment of other people's books. When the earl of Ellesmere heard that the thirty-two annotations in his First Folio (now at Huntington) were by Collier, he comically complained 'that persons when admitted to a library should take the liberty to scribble in the best books!'

The pity of it is that Collier was an excellent scholar whose genuine contributions to Shakespeare studies and English stage history would have assured him the fame and honour to which he aspired' (Shakespeare's Lives, 1991, p.245). Particularly intriguing is the evasive letter by Collier to the economist and civil servant Herman Merivale, dated 12 December 1855: 'I missed the only train that could bring me to Devonshire House by the hour I had named.
