Common law rules may be superseded or replaced by legislation, which is said to “trump” or take precedence over the common law. Offences of theft, for example, based on the old common law offence of larceny, are now governed by the Theft Acts 1968, 1978 etc; and the original penalties for murder (though not the offence itself) were replaced by statutes such as the Homicide Act 1957.

England and Wales has a common law legal system, which has been established by the subject matter heard in earlier cases and so is the law created by judges. It originated during the reign of King Henry II (1154-89), when many local customary laws were replaced by new national ones, which applied to all and were thus “common to all”.

Due process is the legal requirement that the state must respect all legal rights that are owed to a person. Due process balances the power of law of the land and protects the individual person from it. When a government harms a person without following the exact course of the law, this constitutes a due process violation, which offends the rule of law.
